

QUEERING ECOLOGIES

Brussels, 18-22/03/2025

This Blended Erasmus Project allows us to build a dynamic triangle between three schools: the ebabx in Bordeaux (France, ebabx.fr), the erg in Brussels (Belgium, erg.be) and the Departments of CCMI and Architecture of the University of Thessaly (Greece, <https://cult.uth.gr/en/> and arch.uth.gr/en). Through this triangulation, we think and create together in an extended, held and flexible pratico-theoretical context, which we call QueerRing Ecologies. What is ecology in a world, and a Europe, bruised by patriarchal capitalism, and the ecological imbalances that it imposes on all life in view of its own expansion? How can we resist the injustices, the inequalities but also the habits that weigh on the bodies of living beings in a world dominated by racism, speciesism, sexism and the impoverishment of the greatest number? We live in a world where the surveillance of all things, animate or inanimate, is becoming normalized. In the name of European borders, serious human rights violations are committed every day, at the same time as economic globalization forces an unprecedented rate of imports and exports of goods. As privileged people, as artists, researchers, and/or architects who live in different European cities and countries but in this same world, how can we think and do together in this context? How can we disrupt existing patterns and become stronger, more capable of resisting together through the practice of the commons and the collective, through art and the re-architecting of our ways of living? A very first answer, or desire, would be this: we resist by meeting, by creating links, by thinking, by celebrating and working together, by making together stories, works and experiences that count, by making collective between countries, at a distance and on the spot. We are all alive but not in the same way. We will all die, but not in the same way.

A presentation created by Marilina Kioussi, student in the Department of Culture and Creative Media and Industries, follows.
